ABSTRACT

Unclosing Behind Me

Ben Hynes

Unclosing Behind Me seeks to illuminate the spaces of dialogue between the lyric and conceptual modes of poetic writing. The collection hangs around the idea of the biographical as being of intrinsic value to both modes and constructs a loose historical sketch of a poetic subject that begins with events that precede its emergence and follow through to current times. Through the utilization of this biographical skeleton, the collection hopes to demonstrate the manner in which elements of both the lyric and conceptual methodologies overlap and inform one another, i.e., that the process by which a lyric acquires a historical narrative is not entirely dissimilar from the manner that the conceptual mode procures language from an external source text. The manuscript is composed of three movements that reflect this dialogue. The collection begins with a “traditional” long historical narrative poem, “Then the Letting Go: June 24th, 1972”, that broadly describes the drowning of a pair of men utilizing language and tropes familiar to lyric writing from the Pastoral and Romantic traditions onward. The manuscript's second section transitions gradually from this lyric mode toward the conceptual mode and is comprised of several short poems that hinge around the poem “Loosed Change”. The collection ends with “Letting Go, Shuffling On, May 2012” which seeks to recapitulate the narrative of “Then the Letting Go...” through language gleaned from song lyrics selected in an aleatory fashion via the shuffle function of an iPod. It is my hope that this comparative gesture allows for a productive explication of the oftentimes subterranean and unexplored dialogue that transpires between lyric and conceptual modes.

Panoramas of Brake's Cove, Summer 1960

I - May

Ed Brake, refusing to move, wakes daily to a growing heap of refuse outside the front door.
The Lundrigans appropriate land without a deed, drive trucks over the closed eyes of the dead to dump garbage in loads into the ocean:

plastic bags, diapers, fruit peels, tires warped into oblongs. Trash crushes white birch crosses with its weight. Detritus of lives piles high before tipping into slate grey waves, shore-foam. Congregation of gulls gathers where graves once stood, picking scraps from tire-flattened graded garbage.

II

In Brake's Cove they'd buried the dead close to time's licking tongue; tide spills over the lip of the bay to eat away at sand, gravel. Green grass grows roots through pebble, knuckles its fingers around granite curve, slate. Salt water seeps through capillary action, sends sodium into shoots, exhaled skyward as oxygen. Six feet under grass grave wax accrues on new corpses; cheeks, stomachs shed fat, adipose tissue mixes with salt water, condenses into opaque clouds. Limbs erode to bone, bleach white in wet earth where bodily fluids dilute with sea wetness.

Hollow chest spaces echo the faint pace-keeping of water waving against shorelines, ghost of a heartbeat.

III - August

Along shoreline spaces children congregate, their limbs arc into sea and sky, fingers splay palms open to catch sun rays that render flesh translucent.
Above, guttural gull throats hoarsely saw caws into salt air, their grey and white bodies, orange legs, circle unearthed garbage. Skin peels cell parchment from red shoulders, noses, ear-tips, backs: bodies later to be Solarcained by mothers.

Sun cuts a golden swath over the subtly rippling navy bay. Busy children bustle about the median between sand and ocean, grainy secrets flow in sediment carried in the mouth of the Humber from Shell-bird Island, Deer Lake; others swim beyond the stone shelf, strangers caught in the blue alchemy of fresh water with salt.

Feet stamp in low grass, sparse sod grown now over garbage dumped and leveled, on new brown land smeared into water.

Soles and steps flatten greenery, kick deflated soccer balls, run bases. A small boy, Ed Brake's son, hide-and-seeks himself shoreside.

Under the lip, between high-water mark and new playground, the white matte crest of a skull curves into sunlight. Soft, pruned, fingers pry bone from soil, move the skull into afternoon sun slowly sloping toward the horizon along the shoreline.

IV

A skull, soiled slightly, bereft of jawbone and several top teeth – bicuspids, laterals – its wide cheekbones, empty sockets, cracked cranium, grins skyward. Slender fingers press into moist dirt to find the solidness of femur – calcium shot into the chest of Brake's Cove, time's arrow. Bodies gather around the discovery, eyes widen in shock, disbelief, before focusing on bone heft.

A voice notes size and curvature of the skull, cites soccer ball similarity. In small hands the femur resembles a bat: the increased thickness at thigh, smoothness rubbed away by patella tendons a perfect handle. The femur slices through the air, connects with rocks, flakes itself into particles. Each swing whittles bone to splinter, mars the pallid luster of the body's longest bone. The skull rolls lop-sidedly over its once-tomb, propelled by worn shoes, showing young toe-nails and knuckles; passed from foot to foot, encouraged by scavenging gull cries, carrion cheer-leaders screaming air-borne. Empty eyes stare out to sea, skull wobbling end over end, survey the landfill echo Ed Brake's expression upon first view of the refuse outside his door, the length of a thigh from kitchen window.

Constellations

Stand aside, at the rim of stark basement light, as he carries in the limp body, white snow dotting brown fur. After placing it on the table he circuits knife blade around beaver wrist flesh, through epithelial tissue, to separate skin from smooth muscle.

Small forearms shine, muscle lapis blue – the same blue colour as Egyptian jewelry, pre-dynastic temples – under silver web of connective tissue, white fat, red blood, bouqueted sub-cutaneous. Slices straight from chin, between two front orange teeth, death the only end to their growth, to tail; circumvents Castor gland, its contents critical in the crafting of Parisian perfumes, other exotic scents all emanating from this small organ.

He begins the slow unjacketing of the pelt, cuts away adipose, carves gently away connections to ligament, bone. Methodical pace prevents puncturing hide. In the skinning process, between ribs, knife blade accidentally pierces side, sculpts a shocked mouth; new flimsy flesh lips whisper out a blackness untouched by light, the wet iron scent of blood.

He slides naked carcass off fat-coated skin before stretching pelt edges around bullseye-targets on plywood. Uses small hammer to secure rim of flesh from curling into itself. Scrapes iron blade across prostrate pelt to remove excess fat. The slick rawness of the body stains newspaper on cement in the corner, gores horoscopes fatalistic, crimsons Andy Capp. Opaque navy eyes unblink lifeless, clouded, contrast orange incisors. Small pink tongue lolls sideways. The hole in body cavity mouths wounded vowel sounds silently, speaks wordlessly to young eyes and ears who conquer primal fear of death and dark spaces. Small hands reach inside, fingers caress cold globes in organic blackness: wetness of blood, stretch of ligament, holding stomach in palm, consistency of softest clammy hands. Nearly elbow deep into animal's cavity, finger tips, forearms and wrists covered in four humours. Pull arms free with quiet wet suction, the hollow body gasps, shudders into silence. White cellulite greases into mounds beside the taut skin before the board is propped by wood stove to dry.

Later, sold, these pelts travel to Montreal, New York, London, furriers; re-assembled, sewn into human shapes drape arms luxuriously while Ursa Major clots on the back of you hand, Corvus perched on other. Canes Venatici, leash-straining, leads Boötes along ulna and radius, running free until blood dries.

On Receiving Two Postcards, June 26th and July 11th 2007

A Paul Anka stamp anchors illustrations from near Anchorage, Alaska. An arrow arches over parchment, a "Souvenir Post Card" of first sheep herded into Dawson. Drawn close in a low shrub clearing over glacial-scrape soil to graze, wool eyes gaze grassward. Tundra rolls in waves into grayness and the horizon. Printed in Great Britain, published by Zaccarelli's Book Store in Dawson, the Anka Sheep span Canada and the Atlantic expanse as Mailman hands span the distance in deliveries between Newfoundland and Whitehorse and Edmonton.

All 6.6 feet of Ceratosaurus – family ceratosauridae – and its 2,090 pounds press down beside ducking machinery in an abandoned oil field. The flat-rolling plain grain fed by the same seed chewed by Dawson sheep. Here glacial pressure, tectonic plates smashes sediment into oil in black underground oceans. Ceratosaurus – order Saurischia, ferocious smart and agile – snarls at the ghost of an oil well; a strange symmetry in the shape of head and small arms arched out.

A solitary animal, it is active in the day; rarely attacks human beings but never heard a Paul Anka song. In Corner Brook, with a pink Year of the Pig passenger, the Ceratosaurus meets Paul Anka mailbox bound, pressed snout to face on desktop, a destination a million years and several hit songs, a partial stake in the Ottawa Senators, in the making.

Loosed Change

Knaveish language nooses the naïve through the gap between nous allons and vous allez, through negative space conjugal conjunction congregations. Unknowing anglophone gestures conjecturally, mutely losing words loosely lost as wave-breaking subsumes sea sounds.

A slip of the tongue: cordial chord slides through larynx, epiglottally lobs polite syllables wholesale, standing at the check-out of Canadian Tire (or Tim Hortons, or la cinema or le cinema – unsure now even having seen Godard's Masculin , Feminin).

Feeling stridently sans culottes, nude, sous neon lights, laying out a coarse course of anglo words appropriated from French originally, obscured into Romance from roman like Greek art to the Romans. Anglophilic impulse provided movement into Francophone zones;

English tongue a ringing bell villain dans la Belle Ville, immigrant singing, while world Zeppelin-screams chanson! Change, the difference between L'Étranger and moving in, or différence between les mots and social moats leapt to collect extra coin from hands, a bag containing shower curtain, plunger, the hollow heft of a toaster oven, the objective weight and silence of things.

Somnambulist's On It

Late night peregrinator permutes potential selves bipedal, bisects darkened city streets (St. Catherine, St. Laurent...) to investigate open urban cavities, the curving architectures of cement and glass; dissects these excavated civil spaces dream-zoned commercial or coital, private or public ( A dream of flesh: Ellipse of lip licks smooth uncouth spaces slick, eclipses longing ... ( by citizens and city-planners as always gloaming un-night sky glows ghostly over urban planning oeuvre, woos steps into an unusual slowness, into asleep street-walking.

Which At First Calls to Mind A Probably Familiar Story of A Drunk Man Waking Up with His Brain In A Whirl<sup>2</sup>

Incurably an insomniac, Anton Vowl, at midnight, fails to follow his whodunit's plot, picks up sounds of a craft in a narrow canal, acts too slowly to kill a windowsill shuffling indigo wasp.

Vowl walks to his pantry, finds cold milk, pours a glass, drinks to last cold drop and thinks, how scrumptuous is milk at midnight. Lighting Havana cigar Anton puts on his radio, soaks in jazz, a foxtrot, a tango, worldly things from Zurich and Cambodia, finally a Davis Cup finish from Roland-Garros. Turning off radio sounds Vowl works out, doing situps and pushups until vision blurs, swims with transitory motifs: parabolic forms rising, a king as achromatic as a swan in a snowstorm and rising out of a diaphanous mist, Kandinskian diagonals drawing languid cartoon hands without thumbs. Without triumph Anton plums his visions for Jungian import, looks to satisfy his lust for signification as a paradigmatic configuration, but visions stand as only anagrams, insipid approximations; sighs all avatars of that vital quiddity which no occular straining will pull into focus, all ambiguous substitutions for a Grail of wisdom and authority which is now lost. Noticing his rug's optical illusions, Vowl, for four days and nights, looks hard at its oblong form to catch sight of an intrinsic strand looping around a cosmic vanishing point... but all to no good, not an inkling of insight and almost insanity.

Vowl constructs only occult fiction from this rug's swimming and shifting, amorphous and polymorphous, form. With an aid of drugs - opium or laudanum or allobarbital or hot cocoa - Vowl grabs a half hour nap only to launch again into waking to confront his rug. Failing in confronting his rug conundrum, Anton will try anything to surpass his insomnia: Vowl wraps up in polka-dot pyjamas, kimonos, saris from India or his birthday suit, configuring futon, hammock, sofa or divan, and in all positions taught to him by a yoga guru – on stomach and back – in bought accommodations, or his own, Anton's buzzing subconscious vision is still unsubiding. This spurs a hospital trip and a chap from two doors down opts to accompany Vowl on this foray. A GP assays Anton's conditions, jots symptoms down invoking no particular diagnosis, passing him along to an otolaryngologist. Dr. Cochin, said otolaryngologist, prods Vowl's mouth, his larynx, nasal partition, his right sinus, ships him off for an X-Ray and looks for auto-intoxication with a platinum pick against Anton's skull. Cochin, flippant, stating an incision as solitary solution has Vowl cussing Fuck you, you ... you quack I ought to go to an ophthalmologist!

Conciliatory, Cochin, admits that With an immuno-transfusion or two I'll know what prognosis to adopt and starts his analysis of Anton. His diagnosis, sung to his typist, says: common cold, an auto-intoxication of his naso-pharynx, which could possibly put his olfactory circuit out of action. Cochin, assuring, imparts that this particular sinus-ablating incision has a long history, is hospitably sound and mostly vanilla. Vowl stays in hospital, surrounding him cots of mortuary carrion uncomposing all around him. Cochin inflicts Anton with soporifics such as Largactyl, Atarax and Procalmdiol. Around two days following Anton swallows a somnambulistifying drug, a liquid chloroform possibly, that knocks him unconscious. Cochin instills an incision in Vowl's olfactory tract, quickly scarifying nasal partition and cuts out a malignant fungus, a gross and small sinus mushroom, burns his wound shut. Following a bandaging and stitching of his wound, Vowl stays in hospital six days. At his accommodations again, Anton's chronic insomnia is continuing to this day, though now Vowl says, not as agonizingly painful as it always was.

nine people watching bottom for new victims and Heineken left boy ages now numb untied lungs no sleep holding back onto dirt ground nails krill build the body of ghosts

Appendix: Letting Go, Shuffling On, May 2012

What follows is a list of the song titles retrieved by placing an iPod Classic 160 gb model on shuffle. The resulting songs were chosen by the iPod's shuffle algorithm from an archive of 20,934 files and were then grouped by ten. These song's lyrics constituted the language pool from which each poem was constructed – three words from each song totaling thirty words per each of the sequence's poems. These artists and song titles, translated into binary, also comprise the digital tide rising behind the text through the course of the poem. In the instance the song had no (discernible) lyrics, the artist and song title were employed. If the artist and title also failed to yield usable language, replacement words were chosen from within the given grouping. Lyrics were obtained via Google search and transcription when/where required. A complete list of song lyrics can be found here: <http://db.tt/CdUA6tnI>
